I can see hundreds of people get blown up and shot at any time of day on any TV station. I can see the 90% of all commercials now pushing drugs on all of us by asking vague questions like "Do you feel tired every now and again? Maybe you need to pump yourself full of narcotics.....", and yet marijuana is still illegal (mainly because it cannot be patented). I can see images of 40+ year old men and women using thinly-veiled sexual innuendo for even more drugs and products. I can see a disgusting display of base-level, gross-out, shock television on ANY public channel at just about ANY time. And yet lobbyists are trying to block a pay-subscription based radio service from offering traffic and weather info. It seems Mr. Bush and his cabinet's hypocrisy is not limited to Foreign Policy, Education, and Environmental issues. XM isn't even a public issue - it is subscription-based and cannot be accessed by anyone without a subscription, so it should not even concern the FCC. For a political party touting small government, we sure are starting to see a lot of interference in our day-to-day lives. I am sure if Halliburton could somehow figure out a way to make money off these traffic and weather reports then there would be no problem at all with them.
